INSTRUCTOR NOTE: Pick one of the situations below and describe it to the class. Then ask one student to stand up and respond to the question "How are you today?" using the appropriate conversation example shown above. Repeat this exercise with every student.

1. You got an A on your math exam this morning.
2. You are talking to one of your teachers at school.
3. You are talking to one of your friends at lunch.
4. You are not happy today because your mother is mad at you.
5. You are really sleepy because you used Facebook all night.

INSTRUCTOR NOTE: Ask two students to stand up and read the following dialog. One student should play the role of Pat and the other should play the role of Prim. Encourage them to add facial expressions and emotions that match the sentences they are speaking.

Pat

Prim

1. Hey Prim. Hi.
2. You look tired. Are you OK? I'm tired.
3. Why are you so tired? I didn't sleep much last night.
4. Why? What were you doing? I was using Facebook.
5. Is everything OK? I don't know.
6. Are you OK? I'm worried about you. I'm fine. I'm mad at Fah.
7. What happened? She said some bad things about me on Facebook.
8. What did she say? Nothing.
9. Really, what did she say? She said I'm fat.
10. Who cares what she thinks. She's stupid. I know, but it made me mad.
11. Don't worry about her. She has a big problem with her mother. What?
12. Her mother is really mad at her because she failed math.
Now she has to go to a special class every day and it's expensive. I got an A in math.
13. That's why she doesn't like you.
You're smarter than her. You're right! I'm a lot smarter than her.
I'm going to put a picture of my math exam on Facebook.
Then Fah can see it! Ha Ha Ha!
14. Good idea. Yeah, let's go eat lunch. If I see Fah I'm going to smile at her.
